Alessandro Ortis - University of Catania

To get your own consumer key, consumer secret, access token and access secret, create a Twitter application: <https://apps.twitter.com/app/new>.

```
In [5]: import configparser
        config = configparser.ConfigParser() config.read('TwitterConfig.ini')

        auth_info = config['AO_Tutorial']

        CONSUMER_KEY = auth_info['consumer_key']
        CONSUMER_SECRET = auth_info['consumer_secret']
        ACCESS_TOKEN = auth_info['access_token']
        ACCESS_TOKEN_SECRET = auth_info['access_token_secret']
        #CONSUMER_KEY = 'INSERT_YOUR_OWN_HERE'
        #CONSUMER_SECRET = 'INSERT_YOUR_OWN_HERE'
        #ACCESS_TOKEN = 'INSERT_YOUR_OWN_HERE'
        #ACCESS_TOKEN_SECRET = 'INSERT_YOUR_OWN_HERE'

1.1 Helper method:

In [6]: import re #regular expression
        def strip_whitespace(s):
            return re.sub(r'\s\s+', ' ', s) # delete duplicate whitespaces

1.2 Searching by keywords:

TwitterSearchOrder class is for configuring all available arguments of the Twitter Search API (v1.1). It also creates valid query strings which can be used in other environments identical to the syntax of the Twitter Search API.

This class mainly acts as a plain container for configuration all parameters currently available by the Twitter Search API. There are several parameters which can easily be set and modified by methods in TwitterSearchOrder.

Note: Be aware that some parameters can be ignored by Twitter (e.g., not any language is detectable).

In [7]: from TwitterSearch import * import datetime
try:
    tso = TwitterSearchOrder()
